	02-21-2202-vl	Philosophy of Science and of Research in the Humanities	0	Lecture	2
2	Content The lecture addresses the basic concepts of a philosophy of science which, in addition to the classical concepts of empirical research, also includes the canon of methods of the humanities – including the digitality of text, images, and cultural objects. Special emphasis is placed on the development and differences between various models of rationality and scientific insight. Thus, the lecture forms the theoretical foundation of the degree program.

3	Qualification objectives / learning outcomes The participants will be familiar with historical and current theories, models, and concepts of the philosophy of science. They will be familiar with the fundamentals of the research discourse on the theory of knowledge and the methodology of the natural and technical sciences as well as the social sciences and humanities – and they will be able to take and justify positions of the theory debate on the changes in scientific methodology due to the emergence of digital methods.
